Understanding Fence Laws and Property Boundaries

Before you replace a fence, it's wise to check local regulations and property laws. These rules can vary widely depending on your city or homeowners association (HOA) policies.

Who Owns the Fence?

Often, fences on property lines are jointly owned by neighbors. This means maintenance and replacement responsibilities can be shared. However, in some cases, the fence may be entirely on one person's property, who then has full responsibility.

Local Fence Regulations

Municipalities may have specific rules about fence height, materials, and placement. Some areas require permits for fence installation or replacement. Violating these rules can lead to fines or orders to remove the fence.

Boundary Surveys

If there is any doubt about the exact property lines, consider consulting a professional surveyor. Accurate boundaries prevent disputes and ensure the new fence is properly placed.
