The U.S. Army and Department of Defense undertook comprehensive reviews of base security, mental health screening, and counterterrorism protocols. Some of the notable changes include:

1. Enhanced Security Screening: Increased scrutiny of individuals with access to sensitive areas within military installations.
2. Mental Health Evaluations: Improved procedures for assessing the psychological fitness of service members, particularly those in critical roles.
3. Counterterrorism Training: Expanded training programs aimed at identifying insider threats and radicalization trends among military personnel.

These measures reflect a broader shift towards proactive threat detection and prevention, acknowledging the complexities of insider attacks versus external threats.
